1. General Points

- This book contains the prices and fees the bank generally applies to the services it provides for its clients.
- These prices are the highest ones and they are subject to change. Changes are reported to the Andorran Financial Authority (AFA), pursuant to the regulations established for said purpose.
- In the event that the services generate third-party expenses, these will be passed on to the clients, as will the fees received from the correspondents.
- The prices in this Book do not include indirect taxes, which will be borne by the client. The relevant taxes in force at any given time will be charged on the prices and fees.
- As an alternative to the conditions outlined below, Andbank reserves the right to offer its clients the "All-in Fee" and "Flat Fee" rate models. Contact your manager should you require any further information.

9.7. Bills and promissory notes at a discount and collection - valuations and remittances between banks in the Principality

9.7.1. Valuation to be applied to the charge for bills and promissory notes

The bills and promissory notes presented for collection will be debited to the client's account with their due date value or, if they are presented late, with their presentation date value. When the presentation date is different from the due date of the promissory notes and bills or when the latter are drawn on d/v or d/d with the corresponding marker, the due date will be entered in the upper right-hand corner of the bill and this will be the sole valid expiry date.

The due date of bills issued on demand will be regarded as three business days after the date of entry of the bill.

In the case of those issued d/v, the due date will be both the days after the date of entry and the days after the bill issue date.

Bills and promissory notes traded on a conditional basis are exempt from the previous rule; these will be debited to the account at the same value as the one on the date of the debit, provided that this value is later than the due date.

This will be the approach to be followed by all banks for the bills and promissory notes they own and those they receive through the Clearing House. In order to apply the correct valuation to the charges for conditional bills and promissory notes, all Banks must do whatever is required to ensure that these bills and promissory notes from domestic customers and foreign correspondents are easily identifiable at first glance.

The application of this policy does not entail any modification of the valuation to be applied to debits and payments into mutual accounts between Banks as a result of the Clearing House's operations.

10.6. Interbank interest

Interbank accounts are regarded as mutual.

The interest will be reciprocal for both the credit and the debit balances, and it will be calculated on the last business day of each month of the interbank publication ("1-month market") and applicable throughout the period

10.7. Hedges and valuations between banks in the Principality

The hedges of the balances in any currency will be performed by means of a Swift interbank transfer.

Transfers received from abroad to clients of other Banks in the Principality must be paid at their value on the business day following the day they are received, through the Clearing House or a mutual account, provided that this is possible at the moment they are received.

² ABA term deposits published on the 25th or the previous business day, which will apply to withdrawals in the same month

For hedges by means of a telegraphic or Swift transfer, a two-business-day value will be applied, starting from the day on which the transfer is performed.

It is considered that, if a bank initiates a transfer via a mutual account to a client of another bank with a delayed valuation, the receiving bank may debit the issuing bank for the interest resulting from applying the differential between the interest rate of the mutual account and the market-based interbank rate.

The valuation to be applied to payments of cheques into the client's account will be based on the business day following the remuneration date.
