What's behind the recent USD move? And now what?

- The steepest part of the recent USD rally coincides perfectly with an across-the-board cutting of shorts in the green back, with global market positioning in USD having shifted from a US$-28bn worth short contracts last week to a US$-23bn position at end of month (see the table below).
- Therefore, the magnitude of the dollar rebound (+1.7% rally in the USD index in the week ) has been very consistent with the magnitude of the notional amount unwind (4.37bn reduction in net notional shorts –see the table-).
- Having said that, important short positions in USD still persist (US$-23.81bn), being this statistically significant (-1.86 sigmas below the 3-year average), which makes the “USD Short” still the most crowded trade position globally, suggesting that the USD remains clearly oversold.
- A full unwind of dollar shorts would be consistent with the dollar index 6.2% higher from current levels. Nevertheless, we think that such complete elimination of USD shorts is unlikely in the short term, since would require a complete market reassessment of the global market environment.
- We expect a gradual and bumpy move towards our mid-term fundamental price for the USD (1.15)
